

Application Paper

I would rate my motivation regarding my studies about 70%. There are several reasons for it being so. This score is quite high because I do like the educational process. I like the subjects and generally the sphere of knowledge I am in; the way material is taught us is also quite engaging. I get on well with my group and like them a lot; it is important as the relationships within a team are important for activities to which one dedicates much time. The educational establishment itself and its atmosphere are inspiring and combined with the positive aspects mentioned above contribute to a high level of my motivation towards studies.

However, the motivation is not as high as it could be. One of the reasons is that studies take up much time; as a result, sometimes I feel I do not want to study because I want to do something else. Nevertheless, as the material I learn is interesting, this does not happen often. A more important reason is that due to the current situation on the employment market I am not sure whether I will be able to get a good job after my studies. This is a depressing fact, because students generally expect that the fascinating learning process in an educational establishment will result in a successful career, but nowadays it is not always so. The feeling of uncertainty about the future decreases the level of my motivation towards studies.

If I were 100% motivated towards studies I would have more inspiration to learn. Such a high level of motivation would mean that what I learn fascinates me a lot and in that case studying would be the best activity for me. Most likely, my grades would improve as I would spend as much time as possible on learning the necessary material. I would perceive my studies as a key to a professional future career and, therefore, would be willing to do all I can to succeed in my education. I would do all the assignments on time, as I do now, but would try to do them always in the best possible way. Generally, I would constantly put education at the top of my priority list, which would result at my achieving the best performance I can possible attain in my studies.
